And wanders by the bloswood wall, While June makes mitth among the roses. The burnished braids that bind ber head, With exceless ribbon loosely holden-Her friend Louise only them red.

Louisa's bruther says they're golden-Unschooled in the maturer acts Or picking all her friends to pieces, Nor stilled to change her invers' hearts

With witchery of Love's enprices; Lips that would seem the trath to hide, A laugh that's silvery and hearty, The angel of the poor, the pride

Of every jully Christmas party; To fart with poor old Colonel Chance, And win his heart with glances haughty,

Where is the pamelnes grace of old, The spotless woul, the pure composition? Alas ! to all the virgin gold Unternished by the dust of fashing I

And she, a city season's belle, Of slaves and suiture she'll learn too soon And marry, if the world goes well, A tick old widower when she's twenty! Little Boy Blue.

A near little suit for a cute little chap A spry little foot lu a blue little abox. And a pair of blue eyes has my little Boy Blue. All through the cuttage his merriment rings

Joyous and gay are the cours that he sings. One summy summer-time added to two, This is the age of any little Boy Blue. Hand in the sugar cup, finding a lump; Next on the stairway -a trip and a bump; Now in the mud with his trim little show,
